LIFE ASSURANCE. Faw factors are so important to the thrifty and so conducive to thrift (says Truth) as Life Assurance. Savings banks; of course, play a prominent part in the life of the lower and middle classes, yet nothing can be said in favour of depositing money in a savings bank, which cannot also be advanced in favour of depositing it with Life Assurance Companies. I fancy that if, for instance, the advantages of short life policies were more generally known, they would be very largely resorted to by investors. Those wishing for good returns and safety might do invigorating tonic food and stimulant. worse than take a life policy for, any, THE BURROUGHS BEEF AND IRON fifteen years. There are, however, some defects in the organisation of Life Assurance Societies in this country which I think ought to be pointed out. They are the want of a duling with regard to payment of claims, and the contestability of policies. With the question of safety, that of the secrecy as to the accounts and investments of the Societies is closely connested. I am glad to see that some of those who veiled their operations in mystery have lately adopted the policy of publishing reports and accounts; but others persist in their per nicions system of secrecy, and even the nocounts of those who consent to publication are by no means complete enough. As to the particulars which have to be compulsorily filed The most important point is the character tion of the Drugs in any climate.
of the investments, and information on this head is entirely withheld by the British Societies. The law is too lax in this country with regard to Assurance, and regulations such the United States-might with advantage be adopted. The American Government is much more paternal in the matter of life and fire insurance than our own, and the Societies are subjected to a supervision which nobody dreams of in this country. The insurance department of the American Government has to compile annually a full report of the position of each office, discoloration of the teeth.

in which the whole of the investments are separately specified. I do not wish to imply that the large offices in this country have rotten assets; on the contrary, we have, no doubt, every reason t be proud of our English Companies as a whole; but if all our offices had to file full statements of their investments, there would be some ourious revelations. The Government officials in America, moreover, frequently scrutiniso the accounts of the offices, when they are authorised to ask for the production of any document or securities. The same right is vested in any group of policyholders to the amount of at least £20,000.

f ir the protection of the policy-holders and those who are benefited by their policies. ... Another important point is the delay of pay ment in case of death, and the many formalities required by most offices. Few would insure their lives if they could imagine that they left to their families or heirs the legacy of a law-suit over their policies, which may or may not terminate in their favour. This brings me to the advantage of incontestable policies. Recent cases have proved that it is not difficult for Asen ance Societies, on the terms of their policies, to evole payment of losses on the plea of intemperate habits of the deceased. This circumstance diminishes the value of life assurance policies as a security, and it must not be forgotten that averaged with a sufficiently large number of the British Empire. selected lives, its duration may be estimfarce. I intend, on a future cocasion, to show the working of the system, and to addace figures in support of reforms which I cannotholp considering are urgently needed.
